

Muse Site Walkthrough

Direction 1: The Studio

The Studio is a portfolio-first homepage: it leads with what Muse builds, then lets the visitor pick the door that matches them, Build, Ventures, or Think. A portfolio-first homepage direction for muse.sa. The site states the identity in one line, then organizes everything Muse does as three doors: Build, Ventures, Think. Screenshots in this walkthrough are section-exact captures from the direction build, taken at 1440x900 desktop and 390x844 mobile, both at a 2x device scale. Copy is quoted verbatim from the site's own content files.

One of three homepage directions, each built and deployed separately. This walkthrough documents the Studio direction section by section, in the exact order it renders on the page, in both languages, and ends with the decisions the team needs to make before this direction ships.

04 Hero · content and rationale

States the company identity in two lines, backs it with a one-line proof of what that means day to day, and opens a single path forward. Everything below the fold exists to support this claim, not to repeat it.

Content anatomy

- Headline, two lines: an identity statement, then its turn.
- Tagline: where the company is based and what kind of company it is.
- Subtitle: a one-line rebuttal to the thing every studio claims.
- One CTA, into the contact flow.

Verbatim copy

English

Headline: We build our own software.

Headline, turn: And yours, properly.

Tagline: We're a product company in Riyadh.

Subtitle: We actually build the thing, not just the deck about the thing.

Why it sits here

First screen, full viewport. A visitor who never scrolls should still leave with the correct idea of what Muse is: a company that builds its own software, not an agency that talks about building software.

SOURCE

The two-line identity-first structure is validated against Figma's own hero (Reference Evidence 5): state what the company is before any feature claim. The specific sentence is Muse's own positioning line, not adapted copy.

05 Three doors · English

07 Three doors · content and rationale

Routes three different kinds of visitor to the right part of the business without making any of them read the other two first: a client who wants something built, a visitor curious about Muse's own products, and a reader who wants the published thinking.

Content anatomy

- Section heading, no eyebrow above it.
- Three equal-weight cards: Build, Ventures, Think.
- Per card: title, one-line body, a promise set off with a rule, a distinct verb CTA.

Verbatim copy

English

Heading: Pick the door that matches you

Build: title: Your product, built

Build: body: A senior squad builds inside your team, proving value in weeks, not quarters.

Build: CTA: Start a build

Ventures: title: Our own products

Ventures: body: Arabic first, real data, and the details most products skip.

Ventures: promise: We publish what we build, and keep going with whatever people actually use.

Ventures: CTA: See what we ship

Think: title: Knowledge and community

Why it sits here

Immediately after the identity is stated, before any argument or proof, because the fastest thing a homepage can do after 'here is what we are' is 'here is where you go next.'

SOURCE

Card skeleton and equal visual weight are Direct input from Linear (Reference Evidence 1): title-first, no per-card eyebrow. The shared-card, distinct-lane grammar and bilingual density are Direct input from Salla's solutions section (Reference Evidence 2).

The fixed header is hidden only for the instant of capture on every section after the Hero, then restored. This is presentation cleanup so the sticky pill does not paint over a heading in a screenshot; it is not a change to the section itself, and the Hero capture keeps the header visible because it documents the true first screen.

10 Manifesto · content and rationale

Makes the why-now argument: the cost of building good software is falling, which means the gap between companies that move and companies that plan is about to become permanent. Closes with the sharpest form of that tension and a second CTA.

Content anatomy

- Section heading: the five-year claim.
- Three short paragraphs building the argument in sequence.
- Pressure statement: two short lines, plain claim then its consequence.
- CTA, into the same contact flow as the Hero.

Verbatim copy

English

Heading: The next decade of software gets decided in the next two years.

Paragraph 1: The cost of building good software is collapsing. That doesn't help you on its own. It means the gap between the companies that move and the ones that plan is about to get permanent.

Paragraph 2: You could drive that from inside. Most won't, and not for lack of ambition. Day to day operations always win the calendar.

Paragraph 3: We're not interested in your roadmap for this quarter. We're interested in the one that matters in five years.

Pressure, lead: AI isn't optional.

Pressure, emphasis: Waiting is the risk.

Why it sits here

After the doors, because a visitor who has already picked a door is now ready for the argument about why the choice is urgent, not before, when it would only be an abstract claim in front of an unconvinced reader.

SOURCE

Published-thinking-as-stance is Direct input from 37signals (Reference Evidence 3): a manifesto reads as belief, not marketing copy. The identity-hero rhythm of a single declarative sentence carrying the whole stance is Independent validation against GitHub's hero (Reference Evidence 6).

The fixed header is hidden only for the instant of capture on every section after the Hero, then restored. This is presentation cleanup so the sticky pill does not paint over a heading in a screenshot; it is not a change to the section itself, and the Hero capture keeps the header visible because it documents the true first screen.

11 Outcomes band · English

13 Outcomes band · content and rationale

One sentence, large type, stating the delivery standard: Muse ends engagements with outcomes, not just tools. A pause between the argument above and the marquee below, not a new argument.

Content anatomy

- Single centered paragraph, two clauses, the second one accented.

Verbatim copy

English

Heading: We deliver outcomes, not just tools.

العربية

العنوان: نوصل نتيجة فعلية، مو مجرد أدوات.

Why it sits here

A short band deliberately kept short: it closes the Manifesto's argument with a standard, then hands off to the Ticker without asking the visitor to read anything else first.

No external reference source; this is Muse's own delivery-standard line, carried unchanged from the current site copy.

The fixed header is hidden only for the instant of capture on every section after the Hero, then restored. This is presentation cleanup so the sticky pill does not paint over a heading in a screenshot; it is not a change to the section itself, and the Hero capture keeps the header visible because it documents the true first screen.

Bounded clip around the ticker wrapper, animation frozen at its initial frame for a deterministic, legible capture.

16 Ticker · content and rationale

A single repeating marquee line stating Muse's own release rule: nothing ships that the studio would not use itself. Texture and a restated standard, not new information.

Content anatomy

- One repeated line in a scrolling band, tilted off the horizontal axis.

Verbatim copy

English

Line: Nothing ships that we wouldn't use ourselves

العربية

السطر: لا نطلق ما لا نستخدمه نحن

Why it sits here

Sits between the Outcomes band and FAQ as a visual and rhythmic break: the page has just made its two big claims (why now, what you get), and the ticker is the page taking a breath before the objections section.

No external reference source; this is Muse's own internal quality bar, stated as a marquee rather than adapted from another site's pattern.

The fixed header is hidden only for the instant of capture on every section after the Hero, then restored. This is presentation cleanup so the sticky pill does not paint over a heading in a screenshot; it is not a change to the section itself, and the Hero capture keeps the header visible because it documents the true first screen.

Heading: Questions? We have answers.

How is Muse different from a typical dev shop?: We're a small, senior team, not a rotating cast of contractors. No 100-slide strategy decks with nothing behind them. We scope fast, build with you, and measure ourselves on what actually shipped.

What does AI integration actually mean?: Finding where AI removes real friction in how your business runs, building the systems that do it reliably, and getting your team actually using them. Then repeating that cycle as the tools improve.

Who's on the team?: A small senior team based in Riyadh. The people who scope your work are the people who build it, so you're talking to engineers in the first conversation rather than a sales layer. Names and backgrounds are on the about page.

How does pricing work?: Every engagement is scoped and priced on its own, once we understand what you're actually trying to do. Tell us the problem and we'll come back with a number and exactly what sits inside it.

Who do you typically work with?: Teams that want to move fast without dropping the quality bar. That runs from a founder shipping a first product to an enterprise team trying to get an AI initiative out of pilot purgatory.

Why it sits here

After the standard has been stated (Outcomes, Ticker) and before the final ask (CTA), because objection-handling belongs right before the point of decision, not earlier where it would read as defensive.

SOURCE

Objection-handling-as-trust-section is a pattern this direction shares with MOZN's FAQ structure, documented in the source-evidence research bank; the specific questions and answers are Muse's own, not adapted copy.

The fixed header is hidden only for the instant of capture on every section after the Hero, then restored. This is presentation cleanup so the sticky pill does not paint over a heading in a screenshot; it is not a change to the section itself, and the Hero capture keeps the header visible because it documents the true first screen.

Why it sits here

Last section before the footer, by definition: every argument on the page (identity, doors, why-now, standard, objections) has been made by the time a visitor reaches this point, so the only thing left to do is ask.

No external reference source for the specific line; opening with the visitor's problem rather than the company is Muse's own positioning choice, consistent with the Hero's subtitle.

The fixed header is hidden only for the instant of capture on every section after the Hero, then restored. This is presentation cleanup so the sticky pill does not paint over a heading in a screenshot; it is not a change to the section itself, and the Hero capture keeps the header visible because it documents the true first screen.

Why it sits here

Terminal by definition: it is outside <main>, renders after every page's content, and is the one section that must never appear paired with any other section's screenshot.

No external reference source; the footer is Muse's own contact and legal information, not adapted from another site.

The fixed header is hidden only for the instant of capture on every section after the Hero, then restored. This is presentation cleanup so the sticky pill does not paint over a heading in a screenshot; it is not a change to the section itself, and the Hero capture keeps the header visible because it documents the true first screen.

Each decision below carries a recommendation. A different answer from the team changes the plan.

1. Doors as navigation, or doors as homepage sections

The three doors sit mid-page and link onward to /build, /ventures and /think. They could instead become the primary site navigation, with /explore retired.

Keep the doors as homepage sections and keep /explore as the deep-dive summary page. A visitor who wants one door gets that door's full page; a visitor who wants all three gets the homepage summary first.

2. The Think door, before its content exists

The Think door promises articles, field notes and a newsletter. The newsletter signup is live; the articles are not published yet.

Ship the door with the newsletter linked, and hold the articles claim until the first two pieces are actually published. A door that links to nothing published yet erodes trust faster than a door that is temporarily thin.

3. The Arabic register

The Doors and FAQ copy is written in a deliberately colloquial Saudi register, while Legal and Careers content stays formal.

Confirm the split with a native copy review before this direction ships externally: colloquial for Hero, Doors, Manifesto and FAQ, formal for Legal and Careers.

4. Unused service entries in the content files

messages/en.json and messages/ar.json carry three additional entries under Home.doors (product-engineering, ai-integration, brand-interface) that ThreeDoors.tsx never reads; only build, ventures and think render.

Remove the three unused entries before merge so the content files match what the site actually shows, or confirm they are intentionally held for a future service-page reuse.

5. Split legibility versus page count

Every section in this direction measured under the mobile and desktop split budgets (1500 CSS px mobile, 1400 CSS px desktop) at capture time, so no section in this walkthrough required a split page.

If a future revision of this direction grows any section past that budget, add a labeled continuation page rather than shrinking a phone screenshot into an unreadable strip. This walkthrough's own capture measurements are recorded in capture-manifest.json for exactly that comparison.
